Key Terms & Conditions

The full Virgin Media Terms and Conditions and the relevant Legal Stuff form part of your contract and can be found here virginmedia.com/legalstuff. Please read them carefully, together with the additional terms set out in this document.

Your right to cancel

If you wish to cancel your Virgin Media services you have FOURTEEN days from the later of: (i) the day after the delivery of the equipment; (ii) the service start date; or (iii) the day you receive your contract. By approving your order, you are also agreeing to your services starting as soon as possible. If you cancel during your 14 day cooling off period you acknowledge that you will have to pay for the supply of services that you receive. Outside of your cooling off period, if you want us to stop providing the services you will need to give us at least 30 days' notice as set out in Section N (or Section O if you are an Oomph customer) of the terms and conditions.

Early Disconnection Fee

When you agree to take services with us you are agreeing to a minimum period, and agree to take those services at your home address. Typically, the minimum period will be 6, 9, 12, 18 or 24 months, but we will have agreed with you your minimum period before the start of your service(s) and you can find details of your minimum period at the beginning of this document. It will also be confirmed in your Residential Services Contract that we will send you when we accept your completed order.

If you cancel after the cooling off period but before your minimum period has finished, you may be charged an Early Disconnection Fee. How much you'll be charged can be found

Contract renewals

When you enter into a contract with Virgin Media you agree to a minimum term. When your minimum term ends you move on to a rolling 30-day notice period. Your Virgin Media contract will not auto renew. If you have chosen to take one of our 30-day products or services, you can end your contract at any time by providing us with 30 days' notice.
